The necessity for such a plan has been long apparent from the many failures made in teaching these branches in many of our schools. Take, for instance, the study of History. How many teachers have labored hard and long trying to get through the book with a class, only to find on examination that very few, if any, of the pupils could relate, either orally or in writing, in language not borrowed from the text-book (and few even in that) the history of any important period or campaign. Why is this, if not because too much time has been spent in memorizing unimportant matter, and that, too, so disconnected that the first part of the story was forgotten before the last was learned? Place the text-book alone in the hands of the teacher, and in too many cases questions from the margins of the pages are shot at the class and answers as quickly returned; and on examination it is found that the pupils, and perhaps the teacher, are using language the meaning of much of which they have not the slightest conception.
