Not illustrated. 1891 Excerpt: .way to answer all such queries is by practical demonstrations, and it was determined to conduct an experiment bearing on the point in question. Milk was taken immediately after milking and set in Cooley cans, in water at a temperature of 420. The temperature of the milk was 980. The milk set from seven in the evening until 7:45 the next morning, or nearly thirteen hours, when it was skimmed. At that time the temperature of the water was 40, the ice used having reduced the temperature two degrees. The skim milk was drawn off by means of the syphons provided for that purpose at the bottom of the cans. The first one and one-fourth inches of milk immediately below the cream line were left with the cream. This cream was then well mixed with the morning s milk from the same cows, and weighed and tested. The following table shows the weights of the evening milk, morning milk, skim milk and the mixture of cream and morning s milk, the per cent fat and the number of pounds of butter fat in each lot of milk. In this table the fat in the skim milk plus the fat in mixture should equal the fat in the evening milk plus the fat in the morning s milk. It will be noticed that there is a difference of.03 pounds, but with ordinary test bottles the per cent cannot be read close enough to avoid such a small...
