Mir Amman has given us in his preface to the Bagh o Bahar, a brief narrative of himself, from which we learn that his family resided for some centuries at Delhi, where they held a Jagir, or grant of land in free tenure, under the Mughal emperors, and were subsequently involved in the ruin of the house of Timur. Their Jagir was seized by Suraj Mai, the founder of the principality of Bhartpur, and their houses plundered by Ahmad Shah, King of Kabul, when he invaded India. Mir Amman himself, after various vicissitudes, arrived in Calcutta, a destitute wanderer, where his good fortune introduced him, a.d. 1801, to Dr. Gilchrist, Professor of Urdu, in the College of Fort William. The Urdu language was just then...
